O grandma sits in her easy chair,
And in [illegible] with tangled hair.
"I'm going to be married, O grandmamma!
I'm going to be married! Ha, ha! ha, ha!"

O grandma smooths out her apron-string:
"Do you know, my dear, 'tis a solemn thing?"
"'Tis solemn not to, grandmamma,
I'm going to be married! Ha, ha! ha, ha!"

Then grandma looks through her sixty years,
And sums up a woman's hopes and fears:
Six of 'em living, against two of 'em dead;
Grandpa [illegible] and tied to his bed.

Nowhere to live when the house [illegible]
Years of fighting with old Mother [illegible]

But then the music of pattering feet,

Song and prattle the livelong day,
Joy and love and love alway.

O grandma smooths out her apron-string
And gazes down at her wedding-ring,

"'Tis solemn not to! Yes, my dear."

WISE AND OTHERWISE.

—Circumstances alter cases, particularly reduced circumstances.

—A Chinaman, who was looking at an Englishman eating tripe, said: "And yet he hates [illegible] little mice!"

—Compliments are the coin that we pay a man to his face. Sarcasms are what we pay him with behind his back.

—A pretty girl won a musket at the lottery. When they gave it to her, she asked, "Don't they give a soldier with it?"

—"When the corn is waving" means when a superabundance of the grain, in a liquid state, causes the sidewalk to oscillate.

—"Put no fulsome compliments on my tombstone," said old Tom Alvord, the other day. "Don't give me any epitaphy."

—The barber who overheard his son speaking disrespectfully of the profession took him into the back parlor and lathered him.

—"Procrastination is the thief of a good time," was [illegible] of the small boy who got up too late to take the excursion train.

LADIES' COLUMN.

Fashion Notes.

—More and more bead embroideries are coming from Paris.

—Wide collars and cuffs of batiste are to be worn in the autumn.

—Great coils of chenille will be used to trim and exceedingly cheap.

—Plush linings will be substituted for face trimmings in winter bonnets.

—The Princess Stephanie's bridal veil, now on exhibition at Brussels, is worth $6,000.

—Single box plaits about two inches wide are the newest arrangement for flounces.

—The jet is not yet out of favor, and will be much used on winter bonnets, it is said.

—Nearly all the suits ordered of the city dressmakers for early autumn are very dark.

—Velvet strings are half as wide as those of ribbon and a third as wide as those of Surah.

—A bag matching the gown has come to be considered a necessary part of a pretty costume.

—The cotton sateen dresses were even more popular in Paris this summer than they were here.

—Bands of fancy feathers wide enough to fully trim a hat will be used by the milliners this season.

—The waist of a street dress must look something like a riding habit to be fashionable next winter.

—Turbans, Rubens and Gainsborough hats and English walking hats will all be fashionable this winter.

—Very large vases decorated with full length figures in bright colors are the newest mantle ornaments.

—Buckles are slowly coming into vogue again. The belts worn with many gowns make them a necessity.

—The dark purples which appear in winter goods are almost as universally becoming as navy blue.

—The little mantles of India muslin and lace have been the most greatly admired of all the summer wraps.

—Light and bright color prevail in the new carpets. The grounds are well covered, and the figures are small.

—Smooth felt bonnets are not likely to be much worn this winter, but all the furry materials will be in favor.

The Married Flirt.

THE MAIN EVIL OF "SOCIETY LIFE."

Of all the evils pervading "society life," perhaps the most pernicious influences are to be traced to the "married flirt," therefore it will not be amiss in our desire to unveil the ills of the present day socially, to devote a few words to it. Either as a male or female, the married flirt is abominable, but we think the female productive of the most mischief, so it is with her we shall deal. First, pur et simple, it is an odious term, even when applied to a bright young girl; how much more so when attached to a married woman—she who holds her husband's honor in charge, her children's future, the lives and happiness [illegible]. Love of admiration begins the harm. Not content with the love of the one she has vowed to keep only unto "till death do them part," she craves the flattery and admiration of every possible man of her acquaintance—to have a string of admirers who offer incense thereon at her shrine is her very life itself. She insists on the most abject devotion, the greatest and most constant attention. At a ball let any of her followers dare to slight her for some young girl, and dire is the consequence to him—she exacts the most implicit obedience to her whims and caprices. If she appears at the theatre, there, also, the favorite of the hour is expected to be in attendance, to carry her glasses, toy with her bouquet or hold her fan. Did the evil stop here; it would be comparatively harmless, but by degrees the intimacy grows, and at last to such a degree that the flirt begins to be "talked about," and eventually the husband's ear catches the whisper. Then come suspicions, harsh looks, harsh words. Madame, to turn suspicion aside, drops the favorite who has caused the "talk," and directs her attention to a young fellow who is betrothed to her dearest friend. What does it matter to her that endless heart burnings, little jealousies, and, finally, a broken engagement is the result? She has succeeded in escaping [illegible] at a most critical time, the [illegible] any qualms [illegible]

HOME DOCTOR

CURE FOR HOARSENESS.—Put one part of pyroligneous acid into a teapot or an inhaler, and pour six parts of boiling water upon it. The spout of the vessel must now be introduced into the mouth, and the acid vapour inhaled.

The following is a recipe for freckles:—Take one ounce of lemon juice, quarter drachm powdered borax, and half drachm sugar. Mix, and let them stand in a glass bottle for a few days, then rub it on the face and hands night and morning. Two tablespoonfuls of lemon juice will equal an ounce.

WARTS.—The treatment of warts is to pare the hard and dry skin from their tops, and then touch them with the smallest drop of strong acetic acid, taking care that the acid does not run off the wart upon the neighboring skin, for if it does, it will occasion inflammation and much pain. If this practice be continued once or twice daily with regularity, paring the surface of the wart occasionally, when it gets hard and dry, the wart may soon be effectually cured.

The Family Physician says that there is no more valuable indication of disease than the temperature of the body as measured by the thermometer, and especially in the case of children. It gives early information of disease, and admits of an infected child being set apart before mischief is done. The Physician consequently advises mothers to learn how to use a clinical thermometer—a very simple process. [illegible] temperature of the body is 98 degrees Fahrenheit.

LIP SALVE.—An elegant lip-salve may be made in the following simple manner:—Put half a pound of fresh lard into a pan, with an ounce and a half of white wax, set on a slow fire till it is melted, then take a small tin dish, fill it with water, and add a few chips of alkanet root, let the water boil till it becomes of a beautiful red color, strain some of it, and mix it with the other ingredients according as may be desired; scent it with some agreeable and favorite extract, and then pour into small white jars or boxes.

SUNSTROKE.—Very few, we apprehend, of those who labor out of doors use the simple measure of wearing a wet handkerchief or its equivalent in the hat. Now, more than at any other time, it is indispensable that we should be moderate in eating and in drinking—in drinking ice-water. Work must go on, undoubtedly; and the carpenter who labors ten hours in the day might ordinarily begin before seven o'clock in the morning, and work after six in the afternoon, resting during the severest heat of the day. It is more a matter of thoughtfulness than of cost. Within the house, and performing the same service, it is easy to save, by a little calculation as to the fire, much of the usual discomfort. To those exposed to the sun, to go no further, "hot and rebellious liquors" are now a positive danger. When the fiery god of day blights the grass, it is idle to suppose that he does not affect the human organization.

EFFECT OF A CHANGE OF CLIMATE.—The investigations made by Dr. Rattray, and published in The London Medical Times, in regard to the effect of a change of climate upon the human economy, and especially the influence of warm latitudes on the weight and strength, may be thus summed up:—First, that the tropics, especially during the rainy season, should be avoided by natives of colder latitudes; second, that the young, the debilitated, and the diseased should especially shun warm regions; third, that none but full-grown, healthy adults should go there, and that with all, even the latter, a speedy exit should be made therefrom when great loss of flesh and strength gives warning of approaching disease; fourth, that such injurious agencies as may increase the weakening and disease inducing influences of tropical climates, of themselves irremediable, should be avoided; and finally, that to preserve healthy, a tropical climate should be frequently changed for the more temperate ones of higher altitude or latitude.

INFANT MORTALITY.

The excessive heat we have had recently has produced a death rate among children especially alarming. A few days ago the New York Herald published a list of ninety-seven deaths in that city of children under twelve months old. Why death should take off so many of the little ones and spare persons of mature age seems at first sight unaccountable. But we have not far to go to find a cause. One of the principal causes [illegible]

[illegible]

Men of Acres.

Among the persons in the United Kingdom who are each owners of above 100,000 acres of land are the following:—The Duke of Argyll, 175,114 acres; Duke of Athole, 194,640; [illegible]

The Difference.

"A certain gentleman requiring legal assistance had been recommended to one of two brothers, but had forgotten the Christian name of the one he sought, so he called at the office of the one first found and asked for Mr. Podger."

"That is my name, sir."

"But there are two of you of that name here in town?"

"Yes."

"Well, I wish to consult the Mr. Podger—excuse me for the allusion—who wears a wig."

"We both wear wigs, sir."

"Well, the man I seek was divorced from his wife not long ago."

"There you hit us both again, sir."

"The man to whom I was recommended has recently been accused of forgery, though, I trust, unjustly."

"There we are again, my dear sir. We have both had that gentle insinuation laid at our door."

"Well, upon my word, you two brothers bear a striking resemblance. But I guess I have it now. The one I am after is in the habit of drinking to excess—sometimes to intoxication."

"My dear man, that little vice is unfortunately characteristic of the pair of us, and I doubt if our best friends could tell you which was the worst."

"Well, you are a matched pair certainly. But tell me," continued the visitor, "which of the twain it was that took the poor debtor's oath a few months ago?"

"Ha, ha, we were both in that muddle. I was on Bob's paper and he was on mine."

"In mercy's name!" cried the applicant desperately, "will you tell me which of the two is the most sensible man?"

"Ah, there you touch bottom, my friend. Poor Bob. I can't stretch the truth, even to serve a brother. If you want the more sensible one of the two, I suppose I must acknowledge the corn. I'm the man."

CHAPTER I.

THEIR FIRST QUARREL.

Circumspectly emerging from behind the tree trunk, the owner of the cough (and a more discreetly modulated cough never proceeded from human lips) discovered only a young lady buttoning her glove, and a young man staring vacantly at the sky. He was an old gentleman, small, shrivelled, bright-eyed, with a book under his arm, and a scrap of ribbon in his button-hole. He must have been strolling just at the other side of the big tree, on the very brink of the river; and being, doubtless, unwilling to assist unseen at so exceedingly private a conversation, had no choice between making his appearance and walking into the water.

"Et ego in Arcadia vixi," said the little old gentleman, lifting his hat, and walking briskly away.

For a moment they were both silent. Then [illegible] laughed uncomfortably.

"By Jove! now," he ejaculated, "who would have dreamed of that [illegible] being stowed away round the corner like a light comedy parent behind the screen at the end of the third act?"

"What did he say?"

"He quoted a Latin line from a picture of Nicolo Poussin's—Et ego in Arcadia vixi, which means, 'And I too lived in Arcadia.' I presume he wished to imply that at some remote period in the early history of mankind he had himself been young and in love."

"How pretty!"

"Well, yes—and aptly quoted, I wonder who he was?"

Still strolling slowly, they had now come to where a [illegible] road opened down toward [illegible] leading to the Baths at Brunnthal, and this was their direct way back to Pastor Kreutzmann's house. But Laurence made as if he would still keep on through the park.

"Let us go a little farther," he said. "I have something more to say to you, and it is our last walk."

"But it must be one o'clock."

"It is nearly two; and as you may be quite sure that our good friends dined at least one hour ago, you need not scruple to stay a few minutes longer."

"Do you know that we have been out since half past ten?"

"And when shall we be out together again? Not for three months, Winifred. It is a long time to look forward to."

"The time will pass more quickly for you than for me," she said. "It is not half so hard to go as to be left behind."

"Are you sure of that? To be left behind is to submit to fate, and partake of the [illegible]. To go is like wrenching [illegible]

A LENGTHY DISCUSSION.

Mr. Wilson moved, seconded by Mr. Herring, that the report be adopted.

Mr. Herring stated that Mr. Aylesworth had refused to sign the report, for the reason that he thought something should be done towards providing a sinking fund to meet the debenture debt of the municipality. Also that the grading of the boundary road is in progress. Adopted.

That no petition for a sewer be entertained unless signed by at least two-thirds in number of the owners of real estate to be directly interested, and representing at least one-half in value of such real property.

That the cost of any such sewer be provided one-third by the corporation and two-thirds by the owners of real estate interested.

That all sewers be built of stone or brick, under the supervision of the street committee.

That no sewer be commenced until the proper specifications are prepared, and that all contracts be let by tender or public auction.

That a bylaw be prepared in accordance with the municipal act on such petition.

That all persons draining into any common sewer be charged a reasonable rent.

On motion of Coun. Aylesworth, the consideration of the report was deferred until the next session.

ANNIVERSARY SUPPER.

The members of ... Tent No. 115, of the Knights of Maccabees, gave a supper in honor of their first anniversary, at Mrs. Wilson's restaurant on Friday last. The members of the order, with their wives and a goodly number of friends, sat down to the magnificent repast which had been prepared, and after doing justice to the "spoils," the usual toasts were propounded.

The Excellent Sir Knight James Wallace, proposed "The Queen," honored by the company singing "God Save the Queen," accompanied by Odell's quadrille band. "Prince and Princess of Wales and the royal family," responded to by James Allen, Chief of Police; "The Governor General and Lieut.-Governors," by F. —A gentleman of the village wanted it to a farmer the other day for the use of a carriage to go four miles. We are informed that one Sibley, sold a carriage to a farmer near Bath for $100. The man who made the purchase has been insane for years, and as is well known, has not transacted any business. His family on ascertaining the facts, brought the buggy back to Sibley, who refused to accept it. The farmer had only driven the carriage four miles, and it was not damaged in any way, but Sibley would not give up the promissory note nor take the buggy back without a cash payment of $8.

CHAPTER LIII.

"WHERE WAS TONIO MORETTI?"

Blood!

The boy belonging to the trattoria, who came every morning to clean and sweep up, and old Anita, who at this season of the year was at her post as soon as it was full daylight, were first to give the alarm. Then came Maria, the serving maid, and Giuseppe, the cook, quickly followed by the landlord and his family. And then, scrambling out of their beds, flinging open their windows, screaming shrill questions to those below, the lodgers, in various stages of undress, came scurrying down, almost tumbling over each other, and crowding to the gateway.

Blood!

Whose blood? How shed? When and by whom? What had happened under that dark arch in the dead of night, when the lodgers in the Osteria del Cappello were asleep in their beds?

If murder had been done, it had been done so swiftly and silently that not a sound, not a cry, had jarred upon the stillness of the night.

Stefano Beni, waking to the shrill clamor, did as the rest—ran to the window, saw that something unusual had happened, flung on his clothes, and hurried down.

"What is it all about? What is the matter?" he asked, first of one, then of another.

"Murder is the matter!"

"There has been an assassination under the archway!"

"There's blood on the stones!"

"Blood that is not yet dry!"

He pushed his way through the crowd, and there, in truth, just midway of the gateway, lay an ominous crimson pool connected by a trail with another and a smaller pool close against the street curb.

"'Tis blood, sure enough," said the wheelwright, "but I don't see why it need mean murder. I bled as much from the nose one hot day last summer."
